Excavation of a Roman site

Methods and techniques of archaeological excavation/working with stratigraphy, estudy of roman pottery, collecting, clean ing, classifying artifacts.

The Roman Fortress Pulpon Field School is a real hands-on experience in excavation and laboratory at a unique Roman site in the heart of Spain. It is a deep immersion in field archaeology, Roman history and Spanish culture., where the students will contribute to this research that aims to piece together part of the history of the Roman culture in the Iberian Peninsula. While working as field crew along professional archaeologists they will be learning the methods and techniques of an archaeological excavation.

The roman fortress is a colossal building visible from satellite images and one of the largest preserved in Spain from Roman times. It is roughly the size of a soccer field and would have been bigger in its times than the forum of Segóbriga or the amphitheater of Tarraco, the capital of the main Roman province of Hispania. Whit its four towers in the corners, it has no paralels, and this makes of Pulpon, a most interesting archaeological site.
