

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE of AMERICA
120TH ANNUAL MEETING
PROGRAM
ARCHAEOLOGY AT WORK

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA
JANUARY 3–6, 2019

Welcome to San Diego!

Welcome to the 120th Joint Annual Meeting of the Archaeological Institute of America and the Society for Classical Studies. This year, we are in warm, sunny San Diego, California. Our sessions will take place at the Marriott Marquis San Diego Marina, next to the Gaslamp Quarter and overlooking the San Diego Bay.

In addition to colloquia on topics ranging from non-Roman elites, cultural heritage at risk, and three-dimensional archaeology, the academic program includes workshops and sessions on sexual harassment policies for field projects, navigating the job market, and teaching ancient sites. I thank Ellen Perry, Chair, and the members of the Program for the Annual Meeting Committee for putting together such an excellent program. Thanks also to the staff at the Boston office for their efforts in making this meeting a success.

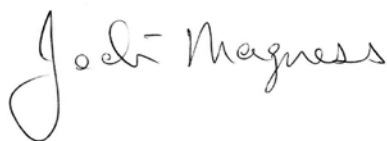

The Public Lecture, "The Rainbow Marshalltown: An Allegory for the Archaeology of the 21st Century," will be delivered by AIA Trustee, Professor Sarah Parcak of the Department of Anthropology at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. Professor Parcak's application of satellite remote sensing to archaeology has earned her international acclaim as a "space archaeologist." Using high-resolution imagery collected by satellites, Professor Parcak has located thousands of previously unknown archaeological sites around the world. In 2016, Professor Parcak used a one-million-dollar TED Prize to build a citizen science platform for archaeology called GlobalXplorer.org. Thanks to Professor Parcak's work, sites that were otherwise undetected can be protected, helping to preserve the world's cultural heritage. In addition to being a TED Senior Fellow, Professor Parcak is a National Geographic Explorer; one of Foreign Policy Magazine's 100 Leading Global Thinkers of 2016; and a contributor to the agenda of the World Economic Forum. Please join us for Professor Parcak's lecture in Marriott Grand Ballroom 3/4/6 at the Marriott Marquis San Diego Marina, on Thursday, January 3 at 6:00 p.m., immediately followed by the Opening Night Reception.

The AIA continues to make progress in fulfilling its mission. This year, one new grant was added to the AIA's extensive portfolio of grants, scholarships, and fellowships in support of archaeological research. This new grant was made possible through the Kathleen and David Bochever Endowment Fund for Fieldwork and Scientific Analyses. We are now in our 123rd season of the National Lecture Program, a key part of the AIA's mission to educate the public about the importance of archaeology. International Archaeology Day on October 20 had 900 events involving more than 24 countries. Finally, you will notice that we have just launched the newly-designed AIA website including a restructuring of our membership categories.

The Awards Ceremony will be held on Friday, Jan. 4 at 5:00 p.m. At this event we will honor a number of outstanding scholars including the winner of the Gold Medal for Distinguished Archaeological Achievement: Professor Curtis Runnels of Boston University. The Awards Ceremony will be followed by the Council Meeting at 6:30 p.m. Although the Governing Board and I manage the AIA throughout the year on your behalf, it is your organization and we are accountable to you. The Council Meeting will be open to all current AIA members, without segregated seating (although only delegates can vote). I strongly encourage all of you – including students – to attend the meeting and have a voice in the AIA's governance.

The AIA is a complex organization with many moving parts and thousands of members representing diverse constituencies. I thank everyone who contributes to making this organization great through your hard work, time, and financial support. I am committed to serving you and advancing the AIA's mission to excavate, educate, and advocate.

See you in San Diego!

AIA President

AIA RESPECTFUL BEHAVIOR AT THE ANNUAL MEETING POLICY

The AIA and its members seek to create an atmosphere at their annual conference in which participants may learn, network, and converse with colleagues in an environment of mutual respect. Its aim is to promote critical and open inquiry that is free of personal harassment, prejudice and aggression. All who attend the annual meeting are entitled to an experience that is free from harassment. Harassment includes any behavior by an individual or group that contributes to a hostile, intimidating, unwelcoming, and/or inaccessible environment.

Harassment also pertains to activities/behaviors such as stalking, bullying, hostility, or abuse, based on sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, race, age, disability, religion, or ethnicity. No attendee should under any circumstance engage in harassment of other attendees either in person or online. By attending the meeting, all participants accept the obligation to uphold the rights of participants and treat everyone with respect and civility. This expectation applies to speakers, staff, volunteers, and attendees.

Members should be aware that they are bound by the codes of conduct at their home institutions. The AIA code does not supersede these codes but is intended to reinforce their message.

In the event that an AIA attendee at the meeting experiences harassment that is inconsistent with the values articulated in the AIA's professional ethics statement, the attendee is encouraged to make a report in writing to the VP of Research and Academic Affairs within sixty (60) days. This report will remain confidential and will be shared only with an investigating committee, which will be specially constituted by the president with members drawn from the officers and trustees of the AIA. They will work together to look into the reported behavior, to contact the person who has reported the behavior, and, if warranted, to contact the person about whom the complaint has been made. The written complaint will be shared with the accused party, who may elect to file a written response, which must be submitted within sixty (60) days of being contacted.

The chair of the investigating committee shall then contact both parties to discuss the incident and determine whether there is a mutually acceptable resolution. If no such resolution can be found, the committee shall determine whether the incident constituted harassment under the terms of this Policy. If the committee determines the incident constituted harassment, it shall furnish a report of the incident, the committee's findings, and a recommended sanction, if any, to the president of the AIA within sixty (60) days. The president will report the outcome to all parties involved, which is final.

Approved by the Governing Board on April 27, 2018.

SESSION 1D: WorkshopCrossing Disciplinary Boundaries in Ancient Painting Studies

8:00–10:30 a.m.

Marriott Grand Ballroom 1

Sponsored by the Ancient Painting Studies Interest Group

MODERATORS: Vanessa Rousseau, Ancient Painting Studies Interest Group, Mary Louise Hart, J. Paul Getty Museum at the Villa, Sara E. Cole, J. Paul Getty Museum at the Villa, and Leslie Rainer, Getty Conservation Institute

The study of ancient painting necessarily draws from multiple disciplines. The understanding of painted objects often requires a point of view constructed from the combination of many disciplines: archaeological context, art history, conservation, materials analysis, biology and phenomenological/viewer response, as well as the ritual and social use of objects and/or space. It is through the multifaceted context constructed by a combination of fields of expertise that some of the richest discoveries and understandings of ancient paintings and their techniques and functions are possible.

This session will highlight the collaborative and multidisciplinary aspects of ancient painting studies with co-authored papers combining at least two fields of study to investigate ancient painted surfaces and iconography. Objects include wall paintings, panel painting, Romano-Egyptian mummy portraits, and polychrome painted objects from the Bronze Age and Pharaonic era to late antiquity.

Papers combine archaeology, art history, provenance research and curation as well as anthropology, primatology, conservation science and technical studies using various forms of imaging to support holistic examinations shedding light on individual objects and the broader issues they represent. These collaborations reveal new information about authenticity and ancient production techniques as well as perceptions of the ancient world and connections made via contemporary museum display.

This collection of brief presentations is designed to stimulate lively discussion amongst panelists and the audience with a goal of enriching our understanding of the complex context of materiality.

SESSION 2B: WorkshopSexual Harassment Policy for Archaeological Fieldwork Projects

10:45 a.m.–12:45 p.m. Marriott Grand Ballroom 2
Sponsored by the Women in Archaeology Interest Group

ORGANIZERS: Maryl B. Gensheimer, University of Maryland, Catharine Judson, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and Debra Trusty, University of Iowa

The purpose of this panel is to address the need for creating and sustaining a safe environment at field projects. Along these lines, we seek to develop a coherent and readily available set of guidelines for fieldwork projects to use in developing sexual harassment policies. This panel arises from the increased amount of discussion centered around the prevalence of sexual harassment and its effects on the professional careers of those who have experienced it stemming from the #metoo movement. Through the use of an anonymous survey, the panel will address the rates and types of harassment experienced by archaeologists, primarily female but also male and those from the LG-BTQ+ community. The purpose of the panel is not to be accusatory but to propose ways in which fieldwork projects can include explicit policy statements regarding reporting procedures and practice adhering to those policies.

This workshop will consist of four components. The first is the presentation of data collected from a survey of fieldwork participants that will address levels of awareness about sexual harassment policies and reporting procedures on fieldwork projects, as well as general rates and demographics of sexual harassment in archaeological fieldwork. This presentation will outline the weaknesses in current approaches to dealing with sexual harassment, both in crafting policy and in enforcing existing policies. The second component of the workshop will be presentations by the directors of fieldwork projects across Europe and the Mediterranean on their approaches to establishing, communicating, and enforcing sexual harassment guidelines. The third segment will be the presentation of the newly updated AIA statement on sexual harassment. The fourth component will be a discussion period, open to both presenters and audience members, that will facilitate further discussion of problems that need to be addressed in both policy and practice. This portion of the workshop will offer an opportunity for audience members to brainstorm about the format and wording of sexual harassment policies.

This workshop session will have two outcomes. The first is to raise awareness of the ongoing problem of sexual harassment in archaeological fieldwork and the various effects that it has on both the functioning of field projects and on the careers of individuals who have experienced harassment. The second is to begin developing a set of guidelines that can be used by field projects to create or refine their own policies. These guidelines will eventually be published online as an open-source resource.

SESSION 2I: Workshop

"Grounding" Roman Sculpture

10:45 a.m.–12:45 p.m.

Marriott Grand Ballroom 1

MODERATOR: Anne Hrychuk Kontokosta, New York University, Peter De Staebler, Pratt Institute, and Elizabeth Marlowe, Colgate University

The study of Roman sculpture has long relied upon methodologies that privilege style, chronology and dating, manufacture, workmanship, iconography, or simple identification. A recalcitrance to reassess this emphasis on the aesthetic qualities of Roman sculpture is rooted in antiquarian traditions and centuries of scholarship. Contemporary research has increasingly attempted to shift the discourse towards sociocultural and political frameworks, recognizing that the message communicated by Roman sculpture was shaped by its context. Yet, new conclusions are often tenuous as many Roman sculptures, including some of the most famous, lack documentation about their find contexts. Frequently reproduced works, such as the so-called Fonseca Bust or the Barberini Togatus, are cornerstones of Roman art textbooks but have no provenance, and some are of questionable authenticity. This problem is not minor: In her illuminating book Shaky Ground (Bloomsbury, 2013), Elizabeth Marlowe estimated that between 35 and 50% of all of the freestanding Roman sculpture in art texts lack any reliable information about their ancient contexts. This number jumps to 75% for the discussion of Roman sculpture in introductory art-history surveys, such as Janson or Stokstad. Considering the wealth of well-researched archaeological and architectural contexts in the ancient world, the numbers beg for a fundamental reassessment in the way we collectively approach Roman sculpture both as specialists and generalists.

This workshop seeks to formalize an ongoing informal discussion on the need to contextualize, or in some cases recontextualize, Roman sculpture. The participants of this workshop will strive to update and redefine how we employ the facts surrounding ancient sculpture, particularly in light of current and rapidly changing views on archaeological methods, looting, museum collecting, and connoisseurship. Through a series of case studies that evaluate examples of "ungrounded" and "grounded" Roman sculpture, participants will collectively reconsider and debate which types of sculpture should be prefaced when teaching Roman Art and how "grounded" sculpture can be integrated more rigorously into the research and publication of Roman material culture.

SESSION 5J: Workshop

Current Events and Heritage Protection: Efforts to Protect Cultural Heritage at Risk

10:45 a.m.–12:45 p.m.

San Diego Ballroom A

MODERATORS: Brian I. Daniels, University of Pennsylvania Museum, and Sarah Lepinski, National Endowment for the Humanities

Current events have amply demonstrated that archaeological sites and historic structures that compose the cultural landscape of the Mediterranean and beyond are at risk from violence, disasters, and neglect. Site looting and cultural destruction in Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Libya, and Afghanistan continues, and there is a need for grounded discussions about these events among the academic community. Tragically, the present situation threatens to overtake even the most conscientious efforts of archaeologists, museum curators, and conservators to be responsible stewards of global heritage. This forum will provide an opportunity to update colleagues about issues related to cultural heritage loss and protection measures in crisis areas. Brief reports will include such topics as the implementation of the Protect and Preserve International Cultural Property Act; recent developments in the implementation of the 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict; the protection of cultural heritage in conflict zones; enhanced coordination among Federal agencies to support law enforcement efforts to protect cultural property more fully; and Federal support for the preservation of collections and institutions under threat. The final speaker list will reflect events as they unfold by November 2018, in order to provide forum workshop attendees with the most up-to-date information.

SESSION 6E: WorkshopNavigating the Job Market: Life beyond Your Degree

1:45–4:45 p.m. Marina Ballroom D
 Sponsored by the AIA Student Affairs Interest Group

MODERATORS: Rachel Dewan, University of Toronto, and Amanda K. Chen, University of Maryland

At the end of post-secondary education, the prospect of securing a job looms large for many students. From an academic professorship to a museum position, a teaching post to an “alt-ac” (alternative academic) job outside of the field, the possibilities for the application of a degree in the arts and humanities are broader and more varied today than ever before. Broaching this wide world of unknown processes, applications, and interviews can be daunting, especially when the transition from student to young professional presents new challenges.

This workshop will enable those in the fields of archaeology, classics, anthropology, and art history to gain a greater understanding of what to expect when they enter the job market. A panel of experienced professors, professionals, and researchers from diverse backgrounds will offer their insights into the state of the current job market. While academic positions remain some of the most common career paths for recent graduates, alternative options are becoming increasingly common. This workshop seeks to explore the many opportunities available in today’s job market, and to discuss the possibilities and intricacies of each. Drawing on their own experiences, the panelists will engage in a dialogue surrounding various aspects of the employment process, including what to expect when beginning a job search, what employers may be looking for, and how best to market yourself with the education and skills you have acquired.

Regardless of discipline or career path, all graduate students will enter the job market at one time or another. An honest discussion of how best to navigate life as a young professional will be invaluable not only for those just entering the field, but also for scholars and professionals looking to hone their skills and grow in their career development.

SESSION 7A: Workshop

Archaeology and Conspiracy Theories

8:00–11:00 a.m.

Marriott Grand Ballroom 1

MODERATOR: Darby Vickers, University of California, Irvine

In order to engage the public, journalists and bloggers often distort the nature of archaeological discoveries, frequently claiming there is some great mystery where none exists. Beyond this, there is a large audience that is receptive to conspiracy theories that distort the evidence to a much greater degree. An entire show called Ancient Aliens is devoted to interpreting archaeological evidence to show that there were aliens that came to earth in ancient times and built things with their technology (and there are interpretations of all sorts of ancient art to show depictions of these aliens). A new show, hosted by Megan Fox but along the same lines as Ancient Aliens, will appear on the Travel Channel.

Archaeology conspiracy theories have been around for centuries (e.g., before he investigated, Thomas Jefferson believed that the Native American mounds that he found were too advanced to have been built by Native Americans so he hypothesized a mysterious race of “mound builders” who he believed had preceded the Native Americans.), but with the advent of social media, today’s archaeologists have a direct avenue of communication with the public. However, social media swarms with people who believe in conspiracy theories and often prove incredibly difficult or impossible to persuade.

New tools are now available for this task since academics in a variety of disciplines have begun to analyze conspiracy theories. This workshop will unite research from archaeology, history, epistemology, and psychology to discuss how best to debunk conspiracy theories. It aims to gather information from those in archaeology about their experiences dealing with conspiracy theories and their proponents in academic and social settings. Ultimately, we hope to put together an interdisciplinary collaboration to produce a pamphlet along the lines of John Cook and Stephan Lewandowsky’s “The Debunking Handbook.” In the age of social media, academics are faced with unprecedented ability to shape the narrative about their field in the public consciousness but also the difficulty of facing a public who hold erroneous opinions. Our aim is to discover what archaeologists need to make the best use of their social-media presence.

SESSION 8E: Workshop Teaching Ancient Sites in the longue durée: The Example of Corinth

12:00–3:00 p.m. Marriott Grand Ballroom 1
MODERATORS: Annetta Alexandridis, Cornell University, and Benjamin Anderson, Cornell University

Corinth and the surrounding region count among the most thoroughly documented archaeological landscapes in the eastern Mediterranean. The excavations of the urban area by the American School of Classical Studies in Athens (1896–); the excavations of Ohio State University at Isthmia (1952–); and the Eastern Korinthia Archaeological Survey (1997–2003)—to name just three of the most prominent investigations—have generated a wealth of data, which is available both in traditional publications and innovative online databases (e.g., ascса.net). These resources permit scholars and students to trace the site's histories in a broadly diachronic fashion, permitting access to a kind of “multiple time” as it is fashioned both with and through space.

Thus everything old is new again: the biggest of “big digs” allows access to richly documented modern histories, local interpreters, and multiple chronologies. A site (such as Corinth) need not be studied (or not only) in chronological sequence, but also offers “reverse” and “transverse” vistas that reveal constellations and strands hidden by the site's master narrative. This includes an understanding of space as historical agent rather than just a backdrop of events. We see here a pedagogical opportunity: the traditional “site seminar” becomes a laboratory for new methodologies and new histories.

The proposed workshop emerged from a graduate seminar on Corinth held at Cornell University in spring 2018 that put this premise to the test. The seminar was team-taught by a classical archaeologist and a Byzantinist. It contained both a week-long visit to Corinth and the Corinthia by the seminar, and visits to the seminar by specialists on Corinth in the Roman and modern periods. Participants included PhD students in anthropology, art history, classics, history, and medieval studies; with specializations in the ancient, Byzantine and Ottoman periods. Their papers dealt with key elements of the site's spatial setting (e.g., Acrocorinth, the sea).

A set of questions for scholarship and the classroom emerge: How can we productively implement the perspective of “multiple time”? How can we do so if respective data sets are not available? How should we document and present excavations and research in the future?

Presentations of 5 min. each on specific topics by six participants will open first into a response, and then into an open discussion of the resulting methodological and pedagogical issues.

Thank you!

Thank you to our loyal donors who understand that without our extensive programming, supported by the Annual Fund and numerous endowments, the AIA would simply not be the organization it is today, nor would we be able to reach as many people as we do each year. The child who learns about archaeology for the first time, the student gaining their first field school experience, the archaeologists sharing their discoveries with captivated audiences around North America – they all thank you for your continued support.

For more information about giving to the AIA, please stop by the AIA Kiosk in the Exhibit Hall, visit www.archaeological.org/giving, or contact Bruce Keeler at (857) 305-9357 or bkeeler@archaeological.org.
